At long last, I’m thrilled to say the Carpenters Wellness Center at 1403 Hampton Avenue is finally open in St. Louis. Our Trustees joined us for a ribbon cutting ceremony in late August, and the center officially opened its doors for patient visits on September 11th. If you haven’t yet had the opportunity to make an appointment or visit the facility, I encourage you to do so. Our partners at Cerner have hired a fantastic care team who are as committed to the health of our members and their families as we are.

The Carpenters Wellness Center—in both St. Louis and, coming soon, Kansas City—will provide a one-stop shop for medical care for our members and their dependents covered by our health plan. Families will be able to meet a primary care physician, optometrist, physical therapist or pick up a prescription all under one roof. Additionally, we’ll offer wellness and behavioral health counseling.

By treating the whole patient, we hope to improve the overall health of our members to help them remain the most highly trained, productive workers in construction. At the same time, we hope to address two of the most important issues on the job site today: opioid addiction and suicide.

September is National Suicide Prevention Month and Opioid Awareness Month. The construction industry has the highest rate of suicide among all occupations. Construction ranks among the highest for workplace injury, and opioids are commonly over-prescribed. Because opioids can lead to addiction or overdose, it’s important to understand risks and alternatives.

It’s important to remember there are resources available. They’re available now at our new Wellness Center, through your Carpenter benefits and through federal programs like the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline (800-273-8255) and the National Helpline for drug treatment and referral (800-662-4357).

We’re focusing on health—physical and mental. I hope you and your family will take advantage of the wide variety of new resources available to you.
Stately Honor
The State of Illinois has honored a former carpenter who spent more than 30 years building highways and bridges. Richard Clayton graduated from Pocahontas High School, where he was a star basketball player. After serving in the Marine Corps, Clayton went into construction, and in his retirement years started a successful tree and plant nursery in his hometown. The state has named the Route 160 bridge between Highland and Grantfork in eastern Madison County in his honor.

Carpenters Speak Up
Across the country, carpenters have been sounding off on a Trump administration proposal to weaken union apprenticeship programs. Known as IRAP (Industry Recognized Apprenticeship Program), the change would allow non-union contractors to do their own substandard training, while claiming to have a “certified” apprenticeship. The UBC (and other unions) have been using social media to flood the Department of Labor with protests over the ill-advised change to professional construction training. The DOL is moving forward, setting up a contentious court battle.

First Look
The board of trustees of the Carpenters Health and Welfare Plan, and other union officials, got a walk-through of our Wellness Center before the Sept. 11 first day of business. Lead contractor Interface Construction broke ground last November, and despite a wet, dreary winter, managed to bring the project in on-time and on-budget.

Tech Talk
The Carpenters International Training Fund is excited to provide members with the ease of accessing Training Verification Cards via the UBC Mobile App. This new feature provides each member with instant access to their up-to-date training and certifications report with the click of a button. Download the UBC app from Google Play or the Apple app store.
In Missouri, more than 100 cases of Legionnaires’ disease have been reported this year. Five patients have died, and this follows a 2015 outbreak that killed 14 at a state-run nursing home in Quincy, Illinois.

Healthcare facilities, especially hospitals, are on high alert for potentially deadly infections that can spread among patients and staff, and result in costly lawsuits. The state of Illinois is expected to spend $24 million to settle all the cases stemming from its Quincy nursing home.

Often, contaminations can be traced back to construction work being done at the facility.
A two-day conference in July hosted by the regional council in St. Louis brought together health experts and carpenters from across the country to discuss ICRA (Infection Control Risk Assessment.) It’s a training program developed by the UBC to address the unique challenges of performing work in healthcare settings, where dust, dirt and demolition can release a host of undetectable but deadly contaminants if proper precautions are not used.

Legionella was a main topic of discussion at the conference due to the alarming rise in cases. According to the Centers for Disease Control, the U.S. has seen a 500% increase since 2000.

Sylvia Garcia-Houchins, a nationally-recognized expert in infection control, said one culprit in the rising numbers is the glut of new medications on the market with the unfortunate side effect of suppressing a person’s immune system.

“We’ve all seen the commercials that say may increase your risk of tuberculosis. Well, guess what? If it increases your risk of TB, it’s increasing your risk of all kinds of other stuff,” she said.

A person who contracts legionella while in the hospital is far more likely to die from it. Research shows that 1 in 10 cases are fatal in the general population, but 1 in 4 who get Legionnaire’s as a hospital patient never recover.

As keynote speaker for the conference, Garcia-Houchins warned that a lot of faulty ICRA techniques are showing up in healthcare. We become the first line of defense for keeping patients safe during hospital construction.

Contractors and tradespeople without proper training may think they’re doing it right but can actually increase the risk of spreading contamination through improperly installed barriers.

“Knowing how to take dirty air out of the building instead of pumping it back into the building is a good example of why our ICRA training is the industry standard,” EST Al Bond said. “During the conference we saw examples of bad techniques where dust is getting blown directly into the operating room, contaminating all the surgical instruments. Because of our ICRA training, hospitals know that hiring our contractors means those carpenters are certified and know how to do the job right.”

James Kroening, who spearheads the ICRA program for the North Central States Carpenters in Milwaukee, said at first he tried pitching the training directly to his contractors — without much success. “They didn’t really see the need until they heard exactly what I was saying come from a hospital’s mouth. When the facility says your people need to have this training in order to work here, then they stop avoiding my calls and start asking me about ICRA.”

“Hiring our contractors means those carpenters are certified and know how to do the job right.”

Continued
For that reason, many of the invited guests to the conference were infection control nurses, administrators and facility managers – the people in charge of monitoring construction work in their hospitals. If a contamination outbreak hits, and it was caused by construction work under their supervision, that’s a crisis no manager wants to be in.

Randy Hayes, a contractor from Toledo, was encouraged by the diverse mix of professionals in attendance. “I’m really impressed with all the hospital people here at the conference because they’re the ones going back and saying, ‘OK, what contractors are working in our buildings and what qualifications do they have?’”

The Carpenters union was ahead of the curve on ICRA, developing a comprehensive curriculum at a time when few healthcare professionals were seeing a connection between construction work and contamination.

In the years since, it’s become a hot topic in hospitals and the Carpenters have been positioned as leading experts in the field of safe building practices.

Before the conference started, attendees got a chance to see our St. Louis apprenticeship school with its state-of-the-art ICRA training simulator. Apprentices and journeymen can now practice contamination precautions in a realistic hospital setting. We are the only union with standardized healthcare construction training, taking the lead in educating not just our members but other trades as well.

As times change, the construction industry must adapt to meet the needs and the requirements of today’s employers. If healthcare facilities are concerned about contamination, then the Carpenters union needs to take steps to get properly trained.

Assuring those employers that we have the expertise to do the job, and do it the way they want it done, gives us the competitive advantage over non-union, lesser trained crews.

We want to thank all the CRC staff, business reps and executive team who spent months planning and organizing our ICRA conference. From the feedback we received, it was highly educational and a healthy success.

Whether it’s ICRA, OSHA Safety or Advanced Leadership, we can improve your skills and boost your potential.

Hispanic High Schoolers Learn the Benefits of a Union Career

The face of construction is changing. Labor unions - at least the smart ones - are actively recruiting the next generation to include people who have not historically chosen the skilled trades as a career. Women, minorities and even ex-offenders are hearing from union representatives eager to replace a retiring workforce and address the abundance of unfilled construction jobs. Carpenters outreach specialist RJ Catizon and representative Robert Pastrana recently met with students enrolled in the St. Louis Hispanic High School Leadership Institute. Sophomores, juniors and seniors participate in the institute to network and build their team collaboration and communication skills.

“We know that college is expensive and not always an option for everyone, Pastrana explained to the students. “Paying your bills is going to be a lot more expensive than you guys realize right now, but unions can offer a really great career.”

An often heard criticism is that today’s educators encourage students to pursue college, without explaining other career options available to those without the money or desire to get a costly college degree. Our outreach team works hard to open young people’s eyes to everything union carpentry has to offer.

Regional Council Has First Woman to Be Elected Local President

A milestone was reached in August when Local 945 in mid-Missouri elected Cindy Frank as their new president. Frank becomes the first woman to lead a local within our regional council. “I’m really proud to make history in this way,” Frank said. “We’ve had a lot of smart, hard working women in our union for a long time and I certainly hope that more of them will be getting recognized in leadership positions.”

A career carpenter for 40 years, Frank is well-known among our members as the driving force behind organizing our chapter of Sisters in the Brotherhood, as well as coordinating many of our council’s charitable and fundraising events.
Pickets are established for various reasons throughout the St. Louis-Kansas City Carpenters Regional Council.

Jurisdictional disagreements between the trades resulting in a picket are not pickets that we as an organization honor.

If a picket happens, please call your business representative.

Suicide Prevention and Opioid Abuse Awareness

September is Suicide Prevention Month, with National Suicide Prevention Week Sept. 8–14. This year, the construction industry is doing something a little different to battle this raging wildfire. We are meeting it head on. We are opening conversations about something no one feels comfortable talking about.

Suicide is the 10th leading cause of death in the US, with nearly 45,000 suicides in the U.S. in 2016. According to a recent report by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, more male construction workers take their lives than in any other industry, at a rate four times higher than the general population.

No one feels comfortable talking about feelings. Jobs are stressful. Work is often seasonal. Injuries happen more frequently in physical careers. Alcohol and drug use rates are high and often used as coping mechanisms.

What You Can Do
Talk about it. Make it part of the safety conversation. Let your coworkers know there is help out there and learn to recognize the signs in yourself and others. Seek help when help is needed. Remember that it’s OK to lean on others and often a necessary part of life.

It is now suggested that the first Tuesday in September shall become the labor holiday of New York and be celebrated every year by a parade and picnic. It is also proposed that this day should be likewise observed throughout the country; that Labor by its own will should establish its own universal holiday – a day that would represent the new industrial era of peace, which is coming through the fraternity of Labor, and which will commemorate no bloody battle fields, or sectional wars, but will be a Harvest festival of universal rejoicing for organized industry. The ruling classes have their Decoration Days and Thanksgivings; why should not Labor declare its own legal holiday?

UBC Carpenter Magazine - 1882
My dad is a retired carpenter and my mom was a laborer. That’s how I got my start with the union.

Being in the Carpenters has allowed me and my family to be successful and to be positive role models in our community.

A lot of people think it’s hard to get a union job but it’s actually very diverse and open to people from all walks of life.

The more you get involved the more you get out of it. Go to your local meetings and find out what’s going on.

I’m glad I became a union carpenter because of the opportunity it’s provided to me and my family. There’s on-going training to help you throughout your career and the people you meet are always offering to share what they’ve learned. It’s a great career.
